Hello, can you see Juan and Veronica playing together in the park? They are brother and sisters and, like all children, they spend lot of time playing together.

Juan is 6 years old and like most kids on his age, likes to play fights with his friends, football, cars, etc.

Veronica is a 4 year old girl and, like most girls of her age, she enjoys painting, playing princesses with her friends, and picnicking.

Today, Juan has invited some friends to have a playdate at home after school. He is very exited about the idea.
When they arrive home, Juan and his 2 friends gone to play together. Veronica was trying join the group; but the boys did not let her join in. They did not want to have girls playing with them at this time.

Veronica was very sad, she really would have loved to play with her brother and his friends. She tries to get close and play with the boys; but they just put her aside.

But all this in the end does not really matter a lot. After this much stress with the kids, Veronica decided to go to her mother and ask her to play with her. Maybe, at the end, there are things that need to be improved?

What would be a fair ending to this story in your opinion?
